Continuing care, sometimes called life care communities, typically offer a variety of independent living arrangements, together with medical and nursing services, full central dining accommodations, and educational, recreational, and social activities. Residents may be offered maintenance services for their major home needs which help to create a comfortable retirement community atmosphere.

Residents are sometimes required to pay a sizable entrance fee as well as a substantial monthly charge in return for all the services offered and the use of their living accommodations. Some agreements between the residents and the provider may state that medical and nursing care will be made available to a resident without any increase in the monthly charges. Some communities charge additional specified fees for these services.

It is important that you understand your options so that you can decide whether living in life care/ continuing care community is right for you. If you are considering entering one of these facilities, you should carefully compare the services and accommodations offered and the fees charged by different facilities.

A facility must provide you with a copy of the “resident’s agreement,” the contract entered into between you and the facility, which contains information such as the circumstances under which the agreement may be terminated and situations in which refunds will be made.

Your rights and obligations will be specified in the disclosure statement and the resident’s agreement, each of which you should carefully review.

Continuing Care Retirement Communities are issued a certificate of Authority by the PA Department of Insurance and are subject to regulations contained in 31 Pa. Code, Chapter 151.
